In March 1871, the United States Government authorized the establishment of a military camp at the Red Cloud Indian Agency on the White River. Home of some 13,000 Indians, the agency was one of the most troublesome spots on the Plains. The camp was named Camp Robinson in honor of Lt. Levi H. Robinson, who had been killed by Indians the previous month. In May 1874, the camp was relocated west of the agency and in June 1878, was officially designated Fort Robinson.

Between 1876 and 1890 Fort Robinson played an active role in the Indian Wars. In May of 1877, Crazy Horse surrendered at Fort Robinson and was killed there on September 5, 1877, while resisting imprisonment in the post guardhouse. The following year, Cheyenne Indians led by Chief Dull Knife escaped from their reservation in the Indian Territory and a group of some 150 were finally captured by troops from Fort Robinson. Imprisoned in a cavalry barrack, the Cheyenne refused to return to the Indian Territory and attempts were made to starve them into submission. Finally, on the night of January 9, 1879, the Cheyenne escaped and began a running fight with the Fort Robinson garrison. During the next two weeks troops from the fort pursued the Indians in the nearby Butte country, and finally killed or captured the last of them on January 22.

During the 1880s, Fort Robinson reverted to garrison life and in 1885, the Ninth Cavalry, an all Negro unit, arrived to occupy the post. During this time, the fort was enlarged and military training was a major activity. With the advent of the Ghost Dance religion among the Sioux in 1890, troops from Fort Robinson served in the campaign that culminated in the Battle of Wounded Knee on December 29, 1891. Following this, the last major battle of the Indian Wars, the Fort was garrisoned by the Tenth, Eighth, and Twelfth Cavaliors. During World War I, activity at the Fort was reduced due to the demand for troops to serve in Europe.

In 1919, Fort Robinson became a quartermaster remount depot, eventually becoming the largest such facility in the world. Thousands of horses and mules were bred and trained for use by the Army, and remount stallions were distributed to breeders throughout the area, greatly improving the local stock. The Fort was also home of the Fourth Field Artillery Battalion from 1928-1932, and during the Second World War became the site of a K-9 corps training center and a German prison-of-war camp. In 1948-1949, Fort Robinson was deactivated as a military post, and the reservation became a beef cattle research station operated by the United States Department of Agriculture. Today, in conjunction with the beef cattle research, Fort Robinson is a Nebraska State Park. Both the University of Nebraska and the Nebraska State Historical Society operate branch museums at the Fort, which is jointly administered with the Nebraska Game and Parks Commission.

The materials in this collection relate to the operation of Fort Robinson, Nebraska, a military camp in Nebraska that was started in 1871 and deactivated in 1949. It is now a place of beef cattle research and museums.

The materials in this collection are associated only with certain functions of Fort Robinson. Most of the official Fort records are Public Records (RG0501), which are described and housed in a separate collection. There are several biographical sketches and newspaper articles (both in German and English). A larger portion of this collection deals with prisoners-of-war and the miscellany series. This collection would be helpful to those who need/want research dealing with the basics of Fort Robinson. Any details should be gotten from the public manuscript records. See also RG0501: Fort Robinson, Nebraska for official public records relating to the Fort.

Note: Twenty-four boxes of research files were added to the collection in 2014. These files were transferred from the Fort Robinson Museum and the Curator at Fort Robinson.
