RG524 U.S. National Archives & Records Service

Publications: 1936-1968
24 reels microfilm

HISTORICAL NOTE

The National Archives was established as an independent executive agency in 1934 to preserve and make available for use the permanently valuable records of the Federal Government. In 1949, the National Archives was transferred to the new General Service Administration where it became a part of the National Archives and Records Service. This service also includes the Offices of Records Management, Federal Records Centers, Presidential Libraries, the Federal Register, and the National Historical Publications Commission.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

This body of microfilmed material reproduces the publications of the National Archives and the National Archives and Records Service, 1936-1968, except the TERRITORIAL PAPERS OF THE UNITED STATES, the publications of the National Historical Publications Commission, the offices of the Federal Register, Records Management, Federal Records Centers, and the Presidential Libraries.

These publications were microfilmed as microcopy #248 of the National Archives series of microfilm publications. An arbitrary Record Group number has been assigned in order to include these films under the classification scheme used by the State Archives.

Most of the publications reproduced here were prepared primarily for the use of the National Archives staff. Some had a limited additional distribution, while others were distributed widely. Many have long been out of print. As a general rule, only the most recent edition of a given publication is included here. Certain publications of the National Archives will also be found in physical form within the Society library and researchers are invited to also consult the library catalogue.
