

Jack Jack

This book was made by little Willie
When he was rather young & silly

He was of an artistic mind
And all his friends inside you'll find

This book, made when he was a kid
Is the best thing he ever did

His cheek was red, his eye was blue His hair was a tender green.

This book, with many sorrowful
Is but a history of his life.

For from the cradle to the grave, from rise to set
He never did a single thing he did not wish to do

He had a magic lantern once & put a picture And straightway wished with all his heart that he had never done it.

He built a board table once, a great and stately table and when complete he burnt the things as soon as he was able

He made a paper-covered one that stretched from chair to chair but when he pulled down it once they did not care to stay there

JAMES W. CLARK
LOWELL, MASS.

and once he stumped a little bird which looked every day and wandered about down through the trees & so often in both directions and so it was through all his life from early morn till night what he would what he tried he never did it right What the cause was he could not tell unless that that it were
He was so holy good and pure to live among us here
His trouble lay full thick & fast wherever his body tread
From the first moment he was born till he went His heart it was so good & true his soul so pure & good
That he would faint whenever he saw a little drop of blood He killed a little better once, by accident of course and wept until his eyes were dim & his throat
He threw himself upon the grass and with his mouth
He closed his lovely eyes & went up to his home above where in the evening's damp & chilly I hope you'll pray for little William
